
The following appendix contains information to create twelve of our recommended films. Most of these stimuli were developed from full-length commercial films, all of which are currently available on videotape or DVD format. For these commercial films, we have provided detailed frame editing instructions for creating the same excerpt that was evaluated in our chapter. For those of you who have editing equipment, we have provided precise timing information in terms of hours, minutes, seconds, and frames. If you have a conventional VCR that tracks time in hours, minutes, and seconds, you can use the counter on your VCR to locate the excerpts to the nearest second and, if possible, can use the pause mode and frame advance to locate the exact frame (there are 30 frames per second in VHS (NTSC) format). In recognition that our field is becoming more digital and computer-based, we have also included frame-editing instructions (in parenthesis) for films that are currently available in DVD format. If your equipment does not have this kind of timing capability, you will need to use a stop watch. In any event, we recommend that you follow our editing instructions as closely as possible because relatively small editing variations can produce somewhat different emotional reports.

Some of the film stimuli are derived from non-commercial sources. These are available for download as noted below.
